You deserve education. We provide the opportunity

Senior High Schools all over the country are readying themselves to roll out governments Double Track intake system which has received some backlash from some opposition political parties and some educational consultants.

According to the government of Ghana, the system is meant to augment governments effort of making senior high school education free and accessible to all Ghanaians.

The system is expected to be operated by only 400 senior high schools out of the 670 SHS in Ghana.

It is also believed that about 8000 teachers are being recruited to handle the sandwich classes so that teachers are not deprived of holidays.

Under the Double Track system, teaching hours are expected to increase from 1080 hours per year to 1134 hours.

Per the available cost analysis available to the public, it is expected that the full implementation of the program should cost Ghc323 Million.

QUALITY ASSURANCE IN EDUCATION

Desk Report

The enhancement of value added of an educational institution depends heavily on improvement of internal processes while value created relies mainly on the increase in goal relevance and stakeholder satisfaction with quality of education services.

Continuous institutional development through a spiral curve along the time span is necessary for total quality in the new millennium. New implications for research, policy and practices that are fundamentally different from the traditional thinking, will benefit local and international efforts for quality assurance and enhancement.

Ghana over the years has focused so much on quantity in education rather than in the quality of education brewed. Many initiatives by past governments and even the current government give us the impression that we seek for quality of education but that is far from the truth and the earlier we remedy this false impression the better for the future of education in Ghana.

For quality assurance, focus must be placed on; teaching students to think and not to regurgitate, to commit to education as a public good and a public responsibility, to focus more on creating a long-term love of learning and the ability to think critically than teaching to standardized tests, to ensure that students have the opportunity to discover their natural abilities and develop them and finally to ensure that students from disadvantaged backgrounds have the same opportunities to quality education as others. To be continued in next issue

7 Best Study Tips for Supreme Int. College Students

Good study habits can make or break your grades. Use these tips to remember facts and make the grade.

1. Good Notes = Good Grades: The correlation between good notes and good study habits is undeniable. However, taking good notes doesn't come naturally to everyone. The trick is to record the key points of the lecture or textbook without writing down too much extraneous info. If you're worried you're missing important details, feel free to ask your Lecturer/Teacher during office hours.

2. Stay Organized: Keep a detailed calendar with all your commitments, including classwork, social events and extracurricular activities. This way, you can block out time each day to study. Organizing your class materials is also one of the most important study tips for students. Use sticky notes to remember important textbook pages, keep your returned assignments, and make flashcards for key terms. You'll thank yourself come exam time!

3. Unplug and Reconnect: This can be tricky, since most students use their smart phones and laptops for virtually all their homework. Still, the Internet is the worst distraction there is, and limiting time on it is one of the best study tips for college students. Try to set boundaries for yourself: for example, no Facebook and WhatsApp during class or study time.

4. Don't Cram: It's definitely tempting to put off your studying until the last minute, but you're much less likely to retain information this way. Good study habits come from pacing yourself. Try to study a little bit each day, rather than saving it all for the week before the exam. This will help you ward off exhaustion and remember what you learned.

5. Don't Over-Study: For most students, "over-studying" seems (and probably is) impossible. But if you're the sort of person who camps out in the library, you might be doing more work than you need to. Among study tips for students, time management is one of the most essential. Make sure you're studying the key ideas of each lecture or textbook chapter, and avoid absorbing useless information. If you're not sure, meet with your lecturer/Teacher to make sure you're practicing good study habits.

6. Find Your Zone: Everyone has their perfect study environment. For some, it's a quiet reading room, Some like to listen to music while they study, and some need complete silence. Try a few different kinds of environments and see what works for you.

7. Take a Break!: No, really, you've earned it! Take a ten-minute break every hour or so, and try to take a day or two off per week if you can. It'll help you stay energized and at peak mental condition. Given how easy it is to become overwhelmed in college, this is probably the most important of our study tips for students.

LIFE 4 LIFE

Years ago, two brothers were living in an oriental city. The younger brother hung around with his bad companions and day and night the power of evil drew him closer and closer into an abyss. The older brother however was considerate towards people, loved God and followed the teachings of the Bible. His brother's careless lifestyle worried him deeply and he often tried to talk him out of it. His older brother kept talking to him, praying and waiting on God's divine intervention. Late one night, there was a loud knock on the door of the elder brother. He quickly opened the door and saw his younger brother who pulled him aside quickly and said "help me! Please hide me! They are after me, look at the blood, I have killed the man". Out of love and without thinking twice, the older brother pulled him inside, changed the blood-stained clothes of his brother and put them on himself and gave him new clothes and locked him in a room. Immediately after that, another bang was heard at the door, this time louder than the previous one. He opened the door to a police welcome. They screamed at him to be silent, they told him that all evidence pointed to his house because there was blood all over the place and he was in bloodstained cloths. They arrested him and threw him into prison. The next morning, he was ordered to a court hearing. He did not defend himself but all he kept saying was "I know I must die because of this crime and the sooner the better". After a few days, he was taken to court. The judges listened to the accusers and considered the police report and evidence that was presented. He was given the opportunity to say something but he declined and lowered his head in innocent. The evidence against him was overwhelming and convincing thus he was sentenced to death. The evening before his execution he asked the prison warden to grant him one last wish. He wrote a letter and asked that it be sent to the addressee after his death unopened. The warden for some reason was touched by the young man's honesty, sincerity and radiance. The next morning, he was executed. A messenger was sent with his letter to the address on the letter. It was delivered to a very pale and nervous man. Upon opening the letter, he read it slowly "Tomorrow I will die for you, wearing your clothes. And you- may you live in righteousness and holiness wearing my clothes and remembering me!" the young man was shaken to the core, he couldn't believe the words, he read them over and over again, "I WILL DIE FOR YOU". The young man ran to the prison in his bid to save his brother. Upon arrival at prison he broke down and showed the letter to the prison guard. Everything began to make sense to the warden. He understood the brothers calm and demeanor much better now. The warden sent the letter and the original criminal to the judges. In front of them, he cried and pleaded to be killed instead of his brother. The judge looked at the culprit with sympathy and deeply moved he said "The sentence was passed, the guilt was paid for, this case was cleared, you are a free man". This incidence turned the young man's life around. He became a new person after he prayed to God. The power of his brother's love turned his life around. He began to experience peace and began to live for God.
